Alaska's icy seas are the source of some of the most prized shellfish in the world, including three varieties of Alaska crab – the prestigious king crab, versatile snow crab (bairdi and opilio), and the popular Dungeness crab.

The largest of all Alaska crab, the king crab weighs between five and eight pounds and is known for its sweet flavor and tender texture. More subtle in flavor than the king crab, the snow crab is recognized for its flaky snow-white meat. It varies in size from one to three pounds. At two to three pounds, the Dungeness crab has a distinctive sweet flavor all its own. Alaska also offers other shellfish delicacies, such as spot shrimp, which are caught in small quantities and known for their sweetness.

Like all of the fisheries in Alaska, the shellfish fisheries are very strictly regulated to ensure the continued abundance and sustainability of the species. Because Alaska crab and shrimp are caught by the pot method and delivered live to the processing plant, the high quality of the product can be preserved until it reaches the market.

With their widespread consumer appeal, Alaska shellfish can add value to any menu or seafood case. They are equally at home in traditional shellfish dishes or in a wide variety of ethnic cuisines.

Product Specifications

The North Pacific Seafoods product line includes all three Alaska crab species – king crab, snow crab and Dungeness crab, as well as spot shrimp. Harvest times vary by species and can be found on our web site at www.northpacificseafoods.com. Our close working relationship with the fishing fleet ensures product freshness and traceability of all our Alaska shellfish products.
